Search For Love

Synopsis

Arriving at her long-lost relatives' Brittany estate, Serenity Smith was greeted with cold politeness by the Comtesse de Kergallen and her darkly handsome grandson, Christophe. Refusing to believe their scandalous stories about her late parents, Serenity set out to prove they were falseâ but getting the enigmatic Christophe to change his mind about her would prove an equally worthy challenge.

Search for Love has a very similar plot as that of Island of Flowers also written by Nora Roberts. I'm wondering if in the beginning of her writing career she used the same basic plot outline and tweaked it a bit for a new book? This seems to be the trend with romance novels from a couple of decades ago where the cookie-cutter plots were very evident, and could be a possibility of this one. Search for Love begins with Serenity Smith arriving in a foreign country to meet the grandmother she never knew. She's picked up at the train station by her French cousin, Christophe and driven to meet her grandmother. Christophe doesn't trust Serenity and feels she's only coming to meet her grandmother and renew family ties in order to obtain part of the wealth from the older woman and Christophe feels obligated to protect her. Standard plot, right? Well, there are a few differences...Christophe is technically Serenity's cousin, but it's a relation by marriage not blood - his grandfather married her grandmother. The landscaping of the countryside is magnificently described during this tale. Roberts goes into great detail about the flowing hills, gorgeous flowers, etc.; it's enough for a very vivid mental image. Soon, the beauty fades into accusations - a forged painting and family honor are a few of the reasons Serenity's grandmother disowned her mother and father. Even though Christophe is convinced Serenity is only after money, he's soon shown the true heart of Serenity with her quick flare of temper at the accusations against her parents.
