Customer Reviews

I love and highly recommend this learning style. It's the best way to learn a language. It is much more natural and comprehensive than those regular audio "repeat after me" sets that rely on rote memorization.

This review is not about the Michel Thomas method, which is far and above the best self-taught language learning method I have encountered so far. I have used the Michel Thomas CDs to learn a number of languages, and while the quality of instruction on this is excellent, I must say the Japanese course gets you much less farther than the French and Spanish courses. While this is no doubt in part due to the fact that it is a language with hardly any overlap whatsoever with English (unlike French and Spanish, where the number of cognates is much higher), the fact still remains that at the end of the entire Total course, you have learned no more than a dozen verbs (if that). Contrast this to Spanish or French, where you are using verbs like 'confirm', 'accept' and 'find' confidently midway through the course. I would recommend buyers and potential buyers of this course, who are expecting the same rate of progress as the more famous courses, to go in with moderated expectations. While Helen Gilhooly's teaching is first-rate, it moves a lot slower than the other languages that Michel Thomas personally taught.
